President’s Message

Kevin M. F. Platt
University of Pennsylvania
AATSEEL President 2015-16

IN SUPPORT OF THE EUROPEAN UNIVERSITY AT ST. PETERSBURG

This will be my last column as president of AATSEEL, before the dynamic and capable Mark Lipovetsky takes over in the new year. It has been a privilege and a pleasure working for our Association these past two years, as the Association has planned its transition to a new conference timing and format. I am very excited to see you all in February in San Francisco for our first meeting in the new configuration. (I can add, the high volume of registrations for the conference so far, as well as the hard work of the conference planners, all point to a successful and dynamic gathering.)

Of course, these years have also been times of growing complexity in the region of the world we study, as a result of the ongoing transformation of public life in Russia and the political and military projection of those processes on its neighbors. I would like to take the remainder of this column to address a troubling situation that attests to the continuing complexity of the Russian situation and offer a statement on behalf of the Association.

The European University at St. Petersburg (EUSP), which is among Russia’s leading institutions of higher education, has recently been sanctioned by the Russian state oversight agency for higher education, Rosobrnadzor, for ostensible violations of administrative standards and regulations. AATSEEL stands in full solidarity with the EUSP, its administration, staff and students, as they seek to eliminate any possible lapses identified by the agency, and in their legal defense of the institution and its mission.

The European University at St. Petersburg is unquestionably a leader in Russia education and scholarship. Its professors are globally recognized authorities in a range of social-scientific and humanistic disciplines, whose publications appear in the most visible and highly rated scholarly journals and presses of the world. The graduates of the EUSP go on to become important and productive professionals in business and government, and also to pursue careers as successful scholars in their own right at other leading institutions in Russia and elsewhere. The EUSP’s programs for foreign students are among the most important centers offering the riches of Russian scholarship and culture to the world.

In all of this activity, the EUSP is one of the most important institutions presenting Russian scholarship to the world and interpreting global scholarly life for Russia, contributing in this way to global communication and mutual understanding.

This makes the recent administrative actions of Rosobrnadzor, which have placed the functioning of this extraordinarily valuable institution in question, highly regrettable. With this statement, therefore, AATSEEL expresses complete support for the EUSP and urges the Russian state and its agencies to work with the institution to overcome any regulatory concerns that might impede its important educational and scholarly work.

Richmond District, San Francisco, CA

A Brief History of Russian Culture in the Bay Area

By Zachary Kelly

Assistant Director of the Institute of Slavic, East European, and Eurasian Studies, UC Berkeley

The first Russian settlement in the contiguous United States was in Northern California at Fort Ross (Росс Крепость), founded in 1812 as part of the Russian-American Company in what is now Sonoma County, 90 miles north of San Francisco. In waves, various groups of Russians have been making their way to San Francisco and the Bay Area, from the time of Russian Imperialism to the age of Google.

The Russian community has historically had a strong presence in San Francisco. The main neighborhood is the outer Richmond District, tucked between the Presidio and Golden Gate Park. Despite the changing demographics of many San Francisco neighborhoods, there are a few landmarks that keep the outer Richmond a Russian neighborhood, including cathedrals, restaurants, and delis. There is at least one newspaper still active – Кстати – serving as a Russian-language news source in the Bay Area. Heading east from the outer Richmond is the Consulate General of the Russian Federation in San Francisco, one of four consulates in the United States. And looking west from the outer Richmond, not only will you see the ocean, but you will also stumble upon a small community of Russian seniors, replete with shops and other necessities resembling Brighton Beach.

In recent years, there has been a surge in Russian events around the Bay Area. Famous performers such as Zemfira and Mummy Troll have recently toured through San Francisco and Berkeley. The bar Neck of the Woods hosts Russian Karaoke and other small-level events. The Pacific Film Archive has run several film series on Russian and Soviet cinema. The most recent program was an overview of Andrei Tarkovsky’s films – “The Poetry of Time: Andrei Tarkovsky.” Cal Performances at UC Berkeley was fortunate to host the Mariinsky Ballet and Orchestra in their performance of Cinderella. In 2017 Би-2, Звери, and Александр Розенбаум will come to the Bay Area. On February 3 there will be a one-time performance of “Мой внук Вениамин” in San Francisco at the Scottish Rite Masonic Center. A simple Google search in Russian or English will direct to all the events in the Bay Area.

Finally, Russian studies also has a long history in the Bay Area. There are strong interdisciplinary programs at both the University of California, Berkeley, and Stanford University. The Slavic Department at UC Berkeley was founded in 1901, one of the first departments of its kind in the United States. Slavic at Stanford followed soon thereafter in the 1940s. Both universities house Title VI-funded National Resource Centers dedicated to Russia, Eastern Europe, and Central Asia. Stanford is also home to the Hoover Institution, founded in 1919, which houses one of the richest Russian and East European archives in the world. San Francisco State University also has a Russian language program with additional courses available in relevant area studies.

Enjoy your time in San Francisco while at AATSEEL 2017. Twitter is right up the street from Parc 55 and Instagram is down by Stanford, but #санфранциско is definitely ready for your arrival!

Everything You Always Wanted to Know about Russian Grammar But Were Afraid to Ask

by Alina Israeli (American University)

Q. I have never seen после того, что before (“После того, что нам оставили было принято решение делать капитальный ремонт.”), I thought it should be always после того, как.

A. There are two components to this issue. The first is that there are two words что in Russian; one is a conjunction, a connector corresponding to English “that”, as in Я знаю, что он придет. The other is the so-called союзное слово, which is translated into English as “what”. Let’s call it a “connective”, although in the linguistic literature the term “connectives” includes conjunctions.

The connective что is a subject or a direct object in a sentence: Я знаю, что произойдет (subject); я знаю, что говорю (object). Occasionally this что is marked with a stress in print, so that readers understand the sentence without re-reading. Typically, if there is a transitive verb in the second clause without an object, then что means (object) ‘what’: Я знаю, что говорю (what) vs. Я знаю, что говорю правду (that). For the subject что, it is typically a verb that describes the happening of an event (случилось, произошло, творилось, приходилось + V, and the like).

The second component of the problem is that после того, как introduces a clause that cannot begin with a connective, that is the language does not tolerate the existence of как and что next to one another, and as a result как disappears. We can find more examples of после того, что:

Во-вторых, после того, что я узнал от Тимоши, у меня просто не хватало духу пойти разговаривать с ней про Соньку. [Вера Белоусова. Второй выстрел (2000)] (object)

После того, что произошло ночью, маленькая девочка со своей маленькой грустью волновала взрослых не то чтобы очень сильно. [Андрей Геласимов. Дом на Озерной (2009)] (subject)

После того, что выпало на ее долю, она выглядит просто чудесно, не правда ли? [Василий Аксенов. Новый сладостный стиль (2005)] (subject)

Q. Do you have an explanation for the use of the conjunction так? Heritage speakers translate English “so” into Russian as “так”, and we constantly have sentences of the type “я не мог зарегистрироваться, так я пошел к профессору и ...т.д.”.

A. According to the БТС dictionary, there are four different words так in Russian: an adverb (так поступай всегда), where так is stressed; a particle (Так о чем мы говорили?), where так is unstressed; a conjunction, where так is unstressed (examples below), and a parenthetic word (вводное слово), where так is stressed (examples below). In addition, there are many particle combinations (так вот), interjections (вот так так!) and complex conjunctions (как... так...).

The particle is either discourse initial, introduces a new topic, or as in the following example, redirects the topic: the first speaker talks about emotions, reactions, and baldness as a consequence, while the second speaker focuses on baldness itself and when it occurred.

— Так что бедняга Сфинкс уже много лет реагирует на все за двоих. Может, оттого и облысел. Это ведь очень утомительно.

— Так он не всегда был лысым? — удивился Лорд. [Мариам Петросян. Дом, в котором... (2009)]

The parenthetic так is the equivalent of English “thus” and it is fairly common in the press. It usually begins a new sentence and is followed by a pause and a comma in writing:

Так, под действие Закона об экстремистской деятельности формально можно подвести любой священный текст и рассматривать его как экстремистский. [Мария Козлова. Свобода совести и светскость государства: проблемы и решения (1 часть) (2004) // «Адвокат», 2004.12.01]

Так, в Ситибанке клиенты имеют доступ к своему счёту 24 часа. [Алексей Крашаков. Иностранцы «съедают» наши банки? (2003) // «Аргументы и факты», 2003.01.29]

The unstressed conjunction has the meaning ‘as a consequence’, but with an additional nuance: the consequence was unexpected.

И на одной из лодок матроса наверх послали, снег счищать. Так он отказался наотрез. Тогда другого послали. [Андрей Битов. Бездельник (1961-1962)]

У друга сыну 4 года. Есть у него книжка про динозавров. Так он выучил их всех наизусть (и названия и с виду)!
(<http://ulin.ru/humour-baby-09.htm>)

Вчера пошли узнать про курсы англ[ийского] около дома — так Ваня всю дорогу твердил — запишете меня — ходить не буду, учить не буду, вы зря потратите деньги... [Наши дети: Подростки (2004)]

What is also interesting is the intonation in these sentences: there is a higher pitch in the sentence before the final fall. By contrast in a sentence where we have the particle так we do not have such a rise:

— А Лешка-то при чем?

— Так он же отказался. Сказал, что не может ехать.
(А. Маринина. Каменская)

Going back to your students, if they said я не мог зарегистрироваться, так я пошел к профессору и устроил большой скандал, they would be perfectly correct, grammatically at least. However, unless they did something unexpected, such as making a big scandal, they would have to use other conjunctions: я не мог зарегистрироваться, и поэтому / и тогда / и потому я пошел к профессору. Or they could get rid of all of these conjunctions completely and use the simple и, which means a consequence or a sequence of events with perfective verbs: Я не смог зарегистрироваться, и мне пришлось идти к профессору.

GradeCam GO!: Grading multiple-choice tests instantly

It is well acknowledged that in addition to implementing their teaching responsibilities, teachers have to assess their students at several intervals to determine to what extent educational goals have been achieved and to provide feedback to students. Depending on the results, learners' strengths and weaknesses are determined, leading to remedial instruction to overcome weaknesses. Research shows that when students are assessed through short examinations such as quizzes and provided with remedial activities based on the results, their level of achievement increases (e.g. Wiliam, 2011; Brown & Talton, 2015). However, it may not be possible for teachers to conduct continuous assessment in the classroom due to several reasons such as teaching workload, number of students, and the time required to grade examinations.

Readers of the previous issues of the AATSEEL Newsletter will remember that I introduced two websites that might be used to create online quizzes (Kılıçkaya, 2010; Kılıçkaya, 2015). In the current column, I have decided to introduce a powerful website that will help teachers overcome the issue regarding the time required to grade tests: GradeCam Go!

GradeCam Go!

GradeCam Go!, available at <https://gradecam.com>, makes grading multiple-choice tests easy and effective. The main advantage of using this website is that it allows tests to be graded using the camera of mobile devices, smart phones, and tablets, eliminating the need for a standard optic form since you can also create and print your own forms.

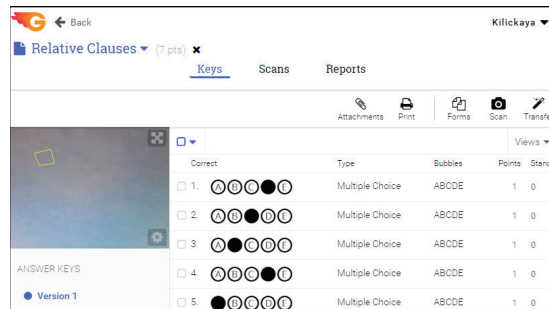

An account must be created to use the website, which can be done using main links on the website. Once registration is completed, a dashboard screen will appear where you can create classes, assignments, lists of students, and reports. The registration will sign you up for 60-day trial of GradeCam Go! Plus, after which you can switch to GradeCam Go! Basic.

The 'Assignments' link is used to create 10-multiple-choice question answer keys in the free account, while in the paid accounts, it is possible to create tests of up to 1000 questions. It is worth noting that it is not possible to create online tests using this website. Rather, this website can be used to grade paper tests easily by creating personalized test forms.

After clicking on 'Assignments > New > New Multiple-Question Assignment', you can give a name to your assignment and then determine the length (number of questions). The next step will be to create the key and the form for the printed test that you have created.

Clicking on 'Forms' on the right side of the page, you will need to decide on some options such as Student ID, number of Copies, Size, and then click on 'Generate'.

The website will create the form based on the selected features.

GradeCam ID:

1. (A) (B) (C) (D) (E)

2. (A) (B) (C) (D) (E)

3. (A) (B) (C) (D) (E)

4. (A) (B) (C) (D) (E)

5. (A) (B) (C) (D) (E)

6. (A) (B) (C) (D) (E)

7. (A) (B) (C) (D) (E)

8. (A) (B) (C) (D) (E)

9. (A) (B) (C) (D) (E)

10. (A) (B) (C) (D) (E)

GradeCam ID:

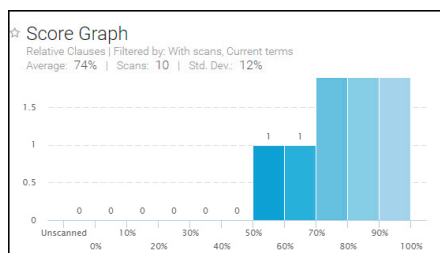

Form Identifier – Do not mark

After the exam is over and the forms are collected, you will need to ‘Scan’ them. GradeCam Go! works with almost all document cameras and webcams. I do not have any document cameras; however, GradeCam Go! works perfectly when I use the webcam of my laptop. If you have not created student lists, GradeCam Go! will warn you by showing the message ‘Student not found. How would you like to save this scan?’. You can click on ‘SAVE AS ANYMOUS’ and continue; GradeCam will store the Student IDs coded on the forms. When the scanning is finished, GradeCam will provide the exam results.

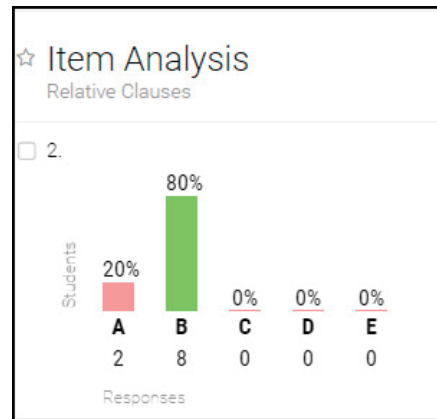

Student	ID#	Class	Missed	Points	Score	Date
[Anonymous]	001		5, 8	8/10	80%	8:18 PM
[Anonymous]	002		2, 7, 8	7/10	70%	8:17 PM
[Anonymous]	003		5, 6, 7	7/10	70%	8:18 PM
[Anonymous]	004		9	9/10	90%	8:18 PM
[Anonymous]	005		9	9/10	90%	8:18 PM
[Anonymous]	006		2, 3, 6, 7	6/10	60%	8:17 PM
[Anonymous]	007		4, 5, 6, 7, 8	5/10	50%	8:17 PM

Assignment reports in GradeCam Go! can be accessed through ‘Reports’. The link ‘Reports’ provides detailed information on student performance, as well as item analysis and item summary, which can be used effectively to assess and improve the reliability of the questions created.

Item Analysis’ shows each answer choice and provides the percentage and number of responses.

‘Item Summary’ shows the information on the percentage of students’ correct and incorrect answers given to each question.

‘Students’ allows viewing of each student’s performance on the test through several options such as overview and by standard.

Evaluation

GradeCam Go! proves to be an efficient and cost-efficient website for teachers willing to assess their students and provide them with fast and detailed results. There are schools around the world that cannot provide their teachers with professional optic readers due to their high prices as well as high cost of maintenance, not to mention the need to use professional optic forms. Therefore, GradeCam Go! is a very handy tool for teachers to provide their students with immediate feedback, which I believe might increase student achievement and interest. Mini quizzes can be used as pre-class assessment to encourage students to come to class having prepared for the classroom readings. Alternatively, these quizzes can be given to the students at the end of several classes to keep their attention and interest within the framework of assessment for learning. Moreover, it is possible to use GradeCam Go! on mobile devices working on Android and IOS operating systems. GradeCam Go! provides fast and easy scoring assessment; however, one caveat is that tests or assignments can only be created in the form of multiple-choice items whose frequent use can limit learners’ creativity and expressions of thought.
